Other contacts
Internal: Lancaster Medical School staff and students, colleagues in the Faculty of Health and Medicine and in other faculties and central administration of the University

External: General Medical Council; Clinical Academic Leads from other medical schools; GP Practices and primary care providers; clinical skills staff; Local NHS provider organisations, local charities, voluntary and other third sector groups; professional bodies, research funding bodies and councils, and key networks (local, national, and international).

Job purpose
To strengthen the clinical academic base in General Practice and Community-based Medicine within Lancaster Medical School (LMS) at Lancaster University. To provide senior clinical academic leadership and service, to teach at undergraduate level, engaging in scholarly activities and/or undertaking research in line with the Medical School’s research strategy, to contribute to the School’s administration/outreach activity, and to deliver and enhance clinical service. In consultation with the post-holder, the proportions of these activities may change over time as defined by the business need, career development and expertise of the post-holder.

The post-holder is required to have and maintain full registration with the General Medical Council and be in good standing with them. The post-holder will hold a license to practise as a GP and will normally be on the Performers’ List with no limitation on practice.

Major University Duties

Learning and Teaching
Contribute at a senior level to the delivery of high-quality education for students providing face to face teaching, reviewing and enhancing teaching material, development of suitable assessment methodologies, quality assurance and enhancement activities. The primary focus of the role-holder’s responsibilities will be on the MBChB but may include other degree and educational programmes where appropriately funded.

This includes the responsibilities listed below:
- Contribute to (and lead where agreed) the full spectrum of teaching (including lectures, Problem-Based Learning sessions, Clinical Communications Skills and Special Study Modules) using appropriate approaches to learning and teaching and teaching-related activities (e.g., quality assurance and enhancement, assessment, outreach, recruitment and admissions) to a high standard.
- Lead and/or co-ordinate the design and development of new and appropriate approaches to learning and teaching and assessment for specialty specific parts of programmes or equivalent activities across the School.
- Supervise and contribute to the organisation and delivery of assessment including contributing as an examiner at OSCEs and other clinical examinations, marking coursework and standard setting of examinations and other formative and summative assessments.
• Act as an adviser for teaching and learning methods through excellent practice and mentoring other colleagues.

Research and Scholarship
• Undertake research scholarship activities that enriches the post-holder as an educator and the academic environment of the School.
• Offer leadership and contribute to the academic medical education environment and encourage the development of scholarly activity of the General Practice and community-based medicine clinical academic team.
• Contribute to debate nationally about policy, methods and practices for medical education through publications, conference activity and roles that advance quality in the discipline.
• Participate in research activities in areas aligned with the University’s research strategy and develop a research profile leading to publications and other appropriate forms of research output.
• Secure research grants or contracts from external funders.
• Attract and supervise postgraduate research students.

Academic Leadership
• Form part of the Senior Clinical Academic Teaching Team providing direction and leadership in General Practice and Community-based Medical Education, upholding the values of the University and demonstrating appropriate behaviours accordingly.
• Undertake terms of office in senior educational leadership roles within the School as appointed by the Head of School (e.g., Deputy Director of Primary Care Academic Teaching, Director of Fitness to Practise, Director of (Clinical) Assessment, Director of Clinical Skills, etc). In this way contribute to the wider leadership of the School with subject specific knowledge and expertise in General Practice and Community-based Medical Education.
• Contribute to the strategic development of the School, line management of (clinical) academic staff and promotion of the interests of the School and wider university amongst external organisations and stakeholder groups.

Any other duties deemed appropriate to the grade of the post and designated by the Head of School or nominated representative.
